MH Architects is a multifaceted architecture firm in San Francisco. Principal Matt Hollis has been in practice since 2006 and has a range of technical experience in residential, winery, office and institutional programs. In addition to California, the firm has designed buildings in Japan, China, Costa Rica and Hawaii. In both residential and commercial projects, MH Architects works closely with clients to help create the optimal building for their specific program requirements and aesthetic goals.

ABOVE: The main entrance of Titus Winery is a balanced composition of varied-height, layered horizontal roof planes. Exterior materials include cedar soffits, concrete board-form tilt-up walls, gunmetal blue panels above windows and anodized aluminum window frames.

RIGHT: The concrete board-form walls from the exterior façade continue at the interior and provide a textured surface for a recessed LED light above. Matching interior and exterior finish materials allow for a blending between the two spaces.
